What Is Smart Contract ?

A Smart Contract represents a self-executing digital agreement whose terms are encoded in code and intended to operate on blockchain infrastructures such as Ethereum. Its purpose is to automate contract execution without the involvement of intermediaries, thereby ensuring transparency, security, and operational efficiency. Upon deployment, smart contracts autonomously execute based on predefined conditions. They are utilized across various sectors including finance and supply chain management, where they streamline processes and bolster trust through the decentralized nature of blockchain technology. Notwithstanding their advantages, challenges such as code vulnerabilities and legal complexities are present.
